Bachelor of Science in Nursing

My time at Washburn University has made me a better communicator, learner, and educator. I spent many hours talking with my professors and instructors. I fell in love with science and nursing content, which made me want to ask questions and explore concepts. I learned how to educate others. A large part of a nurse's job is disease prevention and health promotion, and this is done through patient education. An effective educator identifies the needs of the audience and presents the content in a way that best suits them. I believe that I will pursue a nursing job in either labor and delivery or pediatrics. As I reflect on my four years at Washburn University, I can see how much I have grown as a student, as a future nurse, and as a person.
